for in this great emergency? We feel here in Missouri that there is danger of a severance of political lies, and that the vast edifice erected by our fathere and deficited to the holy cause of liberty, may yet crumble into dust, and that the survivors of the conflict will be left to mourn in the bitterness of inexpressible anguish at the departure of the "American name," the vanquished glory and renown of a cone proud, happy and peaceful nation. God forbid that such may ever be the case.

From the signs of the times, I think it evident that M. Douglas will carry this State, although there has been and now is a great effort to prevent it. we can hardly realize, that men who profess to be strong Southern Breckinridge Pro Slavery men, then, who bolted the National Democratic party on account of their penliar love of the "nigger," and Congressional protection of the same, could, under any circumstances, have voted to indorse the abominable dootrines of Lincoln; but it seems that this is true, and that all of their vain protestations of affection forprinciple, are but as "sounding brass and tunking symbols;" that their honesty in politics, yea as men, before the eyes of the American poople, must bonish as mist before the noonday sun, and that they must be laboring, regardless of the means, to bring discord and ruin upon the country. Would that the imnortal spirits of a Jackson and a Clay could hover around tham in their sections cars the song of Union, which might touch and tender their hearts, and thrill their bosoms with a patriotism peculiar to a better cause.

I can assure you thet Missouri will do her part manfully and ruly in this great battle, and by the verdict she will pronounce in November next, show conclusively to the union that she cannot look upon disunion with the "least of allowance," nor give any conductance to Black Republican triumphs

Fort Breckinridge was visited on the morning of the 28th ult., about 9 o'clock, by 150 indians, on a marauding expedition. They drove off all the stock at the mandant and his troops, who were power-less to offer resistance. The settlers generally are much rejoiced at this event, and eparlment will awake to a realizing sense | Ba of our defenceless and exposed condition, when it is seen that a military garrison, esnot only offer them no assistance, but is unable to successfully repel an attack upon the postitself.

Lieutenant Cook, the Commandant, immediately dispatched a conrier to Fort Buchauan, asking for assistance. The messenger, while on his way, met Licut. Randall, First Bragoons, with thirty men, who was proceeding to make a recurrons sance of the Pinery in the Pinel Mountains, with the hope of finding an accessible route for a wagon road to Fort Breekingle. Upon learning of the descent upon Fort Breckinridge, Lieulenant Randell at once proceeded to the assistance of the garrison. latter had about twenty-four hours the start

He arrived at the post on Saturday morn-lng, and taking ten days' rations for his men, followed after the Indians. Tho but as they are encumbered with stock and do not expect pursuit, it is thought the lragoons will readily overtake them. If Lieutenant Randall can succeed in surpris-ing them, he will make these Indians pay dearly for their temerily. Although he has been at Fort Buchanan with his company for nearly a year, this is the first opportunity he has enjoyed of engaging in warfaro with the Indians. He has a high repulation as an Indian fighter, acquired in other sections of the frontier, and it is to be hoped that he will have the good fortune to win new laurels on the present occasion. new laurels on the present occasion.
